ILLUSTRATION

You can get a pretty good idea of the benefits of clutter clearing simply by imagining your life free of all the negative effects of clutter: lack of focus and clarity; feelings of being professionally, Guest Posting creatively, spiritually, & romantically stuck; insufficient time and attention for self and family; increased stress, irritability and depression. Wouldn't it be great to be free of all these?

No matter what other factors may be dragging you down, I guarantee you that clearing your clutter will dramatically improve your mood and energy. And then any other problems you are confronting won't seem quite so bad. When you first start clutter clearing you may be surprised at the emotions triggered by the simple act of dealing with your stuff.

You think you're just cleaning out your home, but what you're really doing is rooting around in dusty corners of your psyche and coming eyeball-to-eyeball with unresolved business from the past. The personal relics that lurk within your clutter college papers, family memorabilia, detritus from a long-dead marriage can be easier to ignore than to carry to the dump, which is why they've been haunting the back.

As you persevere with clutter clearing a moment will come whenyou realize how much lighter and happier you feel. In th process of coping with your clutter, you've reconnected with your inner self, with dreams and wish- a fond smile. Those that make your heart leap with recognition and longing.. well, now you have the space, time, and energy pursue Clutter clearing gets you out of your rut. It shakes loose frozen aspects of your soul and allows them to journey into your heart where they belong and where you can listen to and act upon them.

Eventually, you will find yourself turning to clutter clearing instead of aspirin or caffeine when you notice that you're not as clear-headed, focused or insightful as you'd like to be. If you're feeling lethargic and don't want to exercise, you'll know to exam-

Lifestyle Changes for Better Skin

Written by Jasmine | Illustrated by Anika Wright

Skin care is one of those things that has peaked at an exaggerated all-time-high, with rich gals buying every new and shiny product under the sun, and the poor gals buying the rip-off versions that make your skin burn and your social media platforms sour.

I won't lie to you, I've dabbled in the area. I was one of those ugly, bumpy-faced teens that hid behind my hair and clumps of cheap makeup that only encouraged blocked pores. I was a picker, scratching myself to the point of scars, before ducking back behind my home-job haircuts.

The first option was, of course, the heavy-duty acne washes that were full of chemicals, costing hundreds of dollars and saturated with television ads. They didn't only fail me, but they made my skin dry, flaky and red, resulting in more of an 'undead' look than a silky-smooth babyface one.
